There will be a sizedy rate of progress without these agencies, because the great drawbacks to progress have been removed, and an incentive for it has been supplied. The ratio depends on education, and there is no school so comprehensive and satisfactory as the Convention. It draws leading men from great distances, and the whole removalation of continuous territory. Its no school so comprehensive and satisfac-tory as the Convention. It draws leading men from great distances, and the whole lical and appeal directly to the under-standing through the eye of the papil-himself qualified in the alphabet so that be can master the primer and more adbe can inaster the primer and more advanced treatises.
